Question 13 :-

Answer -

Stanza :- But after - - - smile and smile...

Reference :-

These lines have been taken from the poem 'My Mother at sixty-six' composed by Kamla Das, an Indo-Anglian poet.

Context :-

In this stanza the poet once again looked at her mother's face and bade her goodbye with a smile willing to put away her fear of losing her.

Explanation :-

At the airport, the poet had to undergo a security check. She stood a few yards away from her mother. From there, she looked closely at her mother's face. Her face looked pale and colourless like the late winter's moon. The poet felt her old familiar pain. Her childhood fear returned. It was the fear of losing her mother. At last, the poet says 'See you soon Amma'. It was a kind of promise to meet her mother soon. she did nothing except smiling and smiling. Her smile was an attempt to hide her pain from her mother. she gave her moral support by smiling at her.

Critical points:-

- The language style of stanza is simple and lucid.
- Smile and smile and smile is a good example of repetition.
- Simile is a figure of speech is used in this stanza.
- The poet describe herself to be a caring, loving and devoted daughter.

Question-14

Answer:- The poem, 'A Thing of Beauty' composed by John Keats is all about the bliss and benefits of a thing of beauty. Its beauty always goes on increasing. Admiring a beautiful thing, the poet says that it is a joy forever. The happiness that provides a beautiful thing never fades into nothingness but multiplies manifold whenever it returns to our mind. A beautiful thing is just like a bower, a place under the shade of tree.

③

USER: 175/2023

The poet says that there are many things which causes troubles and suffering to human beings. These things are - disappointment, lack of human qualities, lack of nobleness, gloomy days and unhealthy or evil ways adopted by human beings. These things are like a pall of sadness our over our spirits. But beautiful things act as a counter force to troubles and sufferings. They remove the pall of sadness over our spirits. As a result life appears to be lovable despite it many ills. The poet lists out all the beautiful things that surround us like the sun, the moon, the

Question-16

Answer The story 'The Tiger King' is about a powerful king who causes death to hundred tigers. When he was only two days old, the royal astrologers predicted that one day tiger king would have to die by a tiger. On growing up, in his pride of power, he tried to disprove this prophency by killing one hundred tigers. But the astrologers said he could kill ninety nine tiger but the hundredth one would be cause of his death.

After killing seventy seven tigers, Maharaja's mission to kill one hundred tigers brought it to a halt. The tiger's population in Maharaja's kingdom had become extinct. Then he found a state prosper in large number of tigers. Then he married to a girl in the royal family so that he could have a right of killing remaining tigers there too.

After killing hundred tigers, the Maharaja turned his look towards his son. He brought a tiger from a toyshop presented to his son on his thired birthday. On that day, when tiger and his son were playing with it, a piece splinter of poorly made tiger pierced in the Maharaja's right hand. Next day, it spread in the Maharaja's right ~~h~~ hand. Within four days, it developed into a puss forming sore. The sore was successfully operated yet the Maharaja died.

The ironical here is that the powerful King had killed ninety nine tiger but the hundredth one - a wooden-tiger toy would be caused of his death.
